A Brief History

The first Mass was celebrated in Palmerston North by Father Delphin Moreau, a French Marist Priest who had walked from Otaki for this purpose on St Patrick's Day, 17 March 1872. There were six families present in the surveyor's office on the corner of the present square.

Father Moreau came to live in the Manawatu area in 1875 and so the Parish of St Patrick's was formed. He built his first church in Broad Street (later Broadway Avenue) in 1877.

A second St Patrick's Church was opened on the same site in 1890, before the third was opened on its present site further down Broadway Avenue in 1925.

Father James MacManus was appointed Parish Priest in 1913 and he was responsible for erecting and maintaining this building until 1962.

The Wellington firm of Clere and Clere were the architects and structural engineers. Frederick Clere was one of the foremost ecclesiastical architects of the time. The most striking external feature is the lofty tower surmounted by three crosses, rising to 50 metres.

St Patrick's Parish is now known as the Cathedral Parish or the Cathedral of the Holy Spirit.
